WORK IN PROGRESS

“Garibaldi’s Expedition: The Rise and Fall of Charismatic Leadership”
EUI Best Second Year Paper Award 2024

Abstract: Charismatic leaders inspire unity and hope, offering transformative visions that resonate across generations. Yet, unfulfilled promises often lead to a re-evaluation of their legacies, reshaping trust in institutions and national identity. In South Africa, Nelson Mandelas African National Congress losing its parliamentary majority in 2024 reflects growing frustration with inequality and a younger generation increasingly disconnected from his ideals. This paper examines Giuseppe Garibaldi’s 1860 Expedition of the Thousand, a pivotal moment in Italian unification. Exploiting an unexpected halt in his campaign, I compare municipalities Garibaldi visited with those he intended to reach but did not, isolating the causal impact of his presence. I show that Garibaldi’s visits initially ignited fervent support but later led to diminished political participation and republican sentiment. These findings reveal how the collision between charismatic ideals and unfulfilled promises can leave lasting marks, reshaping the course of a nation.
